WIFE IS TEXAS CONGRESSMAN'S SECRETARY

Thirteen years ago a young Texas lawyer decided to run for congress. This seemed to his wife a reckless, almost a fool-hardy thing for him to do, for they were very poor. And as everybody knows, politics is not a poor man's recreation. However, the congressional race once entered, this particular man, John N. Garner, was in to win, and his wife was at his side to help him. Mrs. Garner went into the office that served as campaign headquarters and that was managed by her husband's law partner. She did clerical work and any other sort of work that happened to be needed, going about her duties as clerk and assistant campaign manager in a quiet, businesslike way.

This was 13 years ago, as has been said. Representative Garner has now been a member of the house of representatives for 12 years. During this time his only secretary has been his wife. Mrs. Garner learned typewriting and shorthand in order to fill the position. She has a business office in her home, and, unlike most women who are also home makers, she works by businesslike methods.

Mrs. Garner protests that there is nothing remarkable in any woman's filling such a position capably. Perhaps not. But in addition to this, she is a housekeeper, teaches a Sunday school class and never misses a prayer meeting at church, and then finds time to enjoy a normal social life as well.

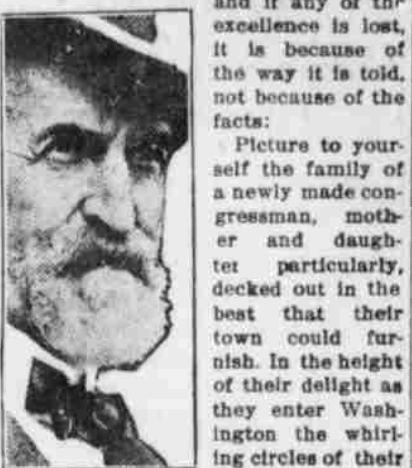

"If I seem to you to accomplish anything worth while," Mrs. Garner said to her interviewer, "it is only because I have learned system. System, I think, is the secret of efficiency, and one which we women find especially hard to learn. You ask if I do my own marketing. Certainly I do. But I could not without being very systematic about it. For instance, I always market on certain days of the week and at a certain hour. This hour, if you would like to know it, happens to be before breakfast. On market days I take care to order provisions for the entire week, so that it may not be necessary to run to the telephone frequently on other days for conferences with the butcher, the baker and the candlestick maker.

"The servant problem? I have never had it to cope with, so I cannot enlighten you on that score. I only know that systematic housekeeping and a certain consideration for servants does much to lighten their labors and to keep them satisfied with their work."

Representative and Mrs. Garner have one son, a young man eighteen years old, who is a student at George Washington university.

SENATOR KERN FAILED TO MAKE IMPRESSION

Senator Kern is the authority for this story. Read it. It's a good one; and if any of the excellence is lost, it is because of the way it is told, not because of the facts:

Picture to yourself the family of a newly made congressman, mother and daughter particularly, decked out in the best that their town could furnish. In the height of their delight as they enter Washington the whirling circles of their imagination cause them to believe the bands are playing and the buds are bursting a little wider just because of the new arrivals.

It was a pair just like this who were only recently introduced to Senator Kern; and on the sacred honor of the senator's own board this is what happened:

"Are you in congress?" asked the daughter.

"Well, I happen to be in the senate," was the reply of the leader of the administration party in the upper house.

Even that did not make a dent in the crust of the new arrivals. They just swelled out and spread their feathers, like birds of paradise, and the odd part of it was that the company present consisted of a large assortment of representatives, senators and their families. There wasn't a private citizen present. Nevertheless, the mother and daughter took turns impressing the crowd.

"We have an electric automobile," said the daughter.

And even that didn't make a hit. Motor vehicles are less of a sensation here than they are in that woman's town, evidently.

And then the garrulous mother began on politics and, turning on Senator Kern, she began a wonderful but rather gabby Democratic speech. In the midst of it she stopped.

"What city did you say you were from?"

"Indianapolis," said Senator Kern.

"What state is that in?" chirped the daughter.

"Indiana," promptly replied Senator Kern.

"Well," continued the mother, "I hope you're not for Bryan. We're not. Of course, we're Democrats, but we are distinctly not for Bryan."

"Say, do you happen to know Bryan?"

This last was shot at Senator Kern very abruptly.

"Well," he replied, thoughtfully, "I guess I could say that I do know him. You see, I ran for the vice-presidency on the same ticket on which he ran for the presidency."

And even that did not make any impression.

THIS REPRESENTATIVE WAS ELECTED BY MAIL

A new member from Michigan is Representative Francis O. Lindquist. The story of his life reads like a romance. His parents were Swedish immigrants to a little lumbering town in Wisconsin, and he left school when in the third grade. His youth was spent in working around lumber yards, docks and hotels, and at last he wound up in Greenville, Mich.

Ten years ago he was pushing barrows of feed around a store in that town for a dollar and a half a day; and after a few months at that he saved the sum of $40. With this sum he set up in business in a small store for himself, and did so well that at the end of two years he began to put into practice an immense plan, which succeeded so well that he is now the president of a large men's clothing concern. His force, when he "set up" eight years ago, consisted of himself and a second-hand machine in the back of his store. Today there are ten girls simply to sort the mail received, which every day amounts to thousands of letters.

When the contest was on, more than a year ago, in Michigan Lindquist determined to come to congress. He wanted this country to have a pure fabric law as regards goods and leather, similar to that passed for pure food. To make himself known he sent out by mail hundreds of thousands of personal letters, and the result placed him in congress.

Wishing to enlist the aid of the president, Lindquist went to the White House last fall with a box of samples of adulterated goods. But the secret service officer stopped him at the door, and it was only by displaying his wares that he secured an entrance.

"The next time I go," he explained, "I will take my goods in an open-work hamper."

When Mr. Glass ran for the Virginia senate and was beaten by what is known as the "machine" in the state, his boy was a college student of great achievement on the athletic field. One day the lad went to Baltimore to attend a track meet and came home with a medal.

When he entered the dining room in which his paternal ancestor sat discussing some old ham and waffles, the boy threw his trophy on the table in front of his father, saying:

"Well, dad, you see there is some one in the family who can run if you can't!"

Glass has worn that medal on his watch chain ever since.

ters from his constituents, as the following will show: "Please send me a span of mules from the agricultural department—also a pair of crutches for my rheumatism."

NOMADS OF THE HIGH ROAD

Would Seem That Physical Discomfort Is a Matter of Preference With Some Tramps.

An old man came last night wanting to sleep in the barn. He refused all pecuniary or alimentary assistance, comparing himself to him who had not where to lay his head and was so very pressing that I finally acquiesced, ushered him into the cow loft, gave him a horse blanket or two, put a lock on the henhouse door close beside and passed a restless night myself reflecting, among other things, that he might die there and necessitate a visit to the coroner. However, I saw him go off early while I was dressing. There was another ancient hermit of this neighborhood who used to go about in a greenish coat girded with rope and was said to have slept all one winter in a burrow under a haystack. I can well understand the comfort of such primitive lodgings to a person who cared not for certain moldiness, probable rats or possible fire.—From "A Farmer's Notebook," by C. E. D. Phelps.

EXTREME CRUELTY OF LAW

Amateur Headsman Made Last Beheading in British Isles a Scene of Horror.

Most of us are wont to think of the beheading as a relic of the dark ages, but the last decapitation which took place in the British Isles was no later than 1820. The victims were two unfortunates who had taken a part in the Bonnyman rising and were convicted of high treason. The sentence was carried out in Stirling, Scotland.

The headsman, who was masked and wore a serge gown, was a small, nervous man who did his work so badly that it was not until the third stroke that he decapitated one of the unfortunates. The assembled crowd yelled "Murder!" and the miserable headsman was heard to remark: "I wish to heaven I had not it to do."

For a long time his identity was a mystery, but it later developed that he was a young medical student of Glasgow. The ax and the mask which he used on the occasion may still be seen.

SNOW IN SUNNY FRANCE.

While we struggle with snow drifts this winter we may have thought of "Sunny France" and the brilliant sunshine on the Riviera.

But Europe has had a hard winter, too. Trains have been held up by drifts in places seldom troubled by snow. L'illustration prints a photograph of a railway cutting near Carcassonne, almost within sight of the Mediterranean, which was filled to the top with snow.

All that could be seen of the two locomotives behind the snow plow were the tops of their smoke stacks.

"That young college orator seems to take a rosy view of life."

"Yes, she thinks it more becoming to her complexion than the blues."

POWERFUL HYDROAEROPLANE.

One of the French manufacturers has produced a hydroaeroplane so powerful that it is in reality little less than a flying tugboat.

BAD PRACTISE.

"I wouldn't sell soothing medicine for crying babies if I were you."

"Why not?"

"It's hush money."

ACCOUNTED FOR.

"That couple lead a cat-and-dog life. I wonder why?"

"I guess it is because he is so dogmatic and she is so categorical."

Child Cross? Feverish? Sick?

A cross, peevish, listless child, with coated tongue, pale, doesn't sleep; eats sometimes very little, then again ravenously; stomach sour; breath fetid; pains in stomach, with diarrhoea; grinds teeth while asleep, and starts up with terror—all suggest a Worm Killer—something that expels worms, and almost every child has them. Kickapoo Worm Killer is needed. Get a box to-day. Start at once. You won't have to coax, as Kickapoo Worm Killer is a candy confection. Expels the worms, the cause of your child's trouble. 25c. at your Druggist. Advertisement.

NOT TIME IN A MILE.

A Washington horseman tells of an over-anxious owner and a particularly conscientious rider at a race meet in Pimlico. The owner issued full orders as to the way a horse was to be ridden in a certain race. The jockey was a diminutive dandy. The original orders were supplemented by provisions for all manner of emergencies, all of which somewhat bewildered the jockey.

"See heah, boss," he finally said "dis heah race is only one mile, can't do all them things you tell in jest one mile."

EXACT SPOT.

"Did the man who attacked you hit you between remarks?"

"No, he didn't. He hit me between the eyes."

SURE TO FIND.

"There is one class of hunters who are sure to find their game."

"Who are they?"

"People who hunt trouble."

REPARTEE.
